Information Technology Policy

Policy 110-00: Information Technology Service Functions

State government is comprised of a diverse set of services to citizens. Services may be generally categorized according to the primary mission or purpose of the state agency or institution. In most cases, information systems were not designed to promote the collaboration of agency mission and data resources. As such, there exists duplication of data and resources necessary to accomplish multiple missions. The State needs to promote communications and collaboration among those agencies serving common missions and individuals.

OBJECTIVES:

The objective of this policy is to establish broad functional categories of services supported by multiple agencies and information systems. Members of these groups will be encouraged to communicate and plan the development of information systems that promote collaboration and electronic interfaces. These groups will provide a common forum for the review and feedback of agency plans, budgets and projects.

This policy applies to all state agencies, boards and commissions.
